Conjunctions are words that come together. There are two types of conjunction: subordination and coordination of conjunctions. Coordination conjunctions are more versatile. They can be used to merge words, phrases, and clauses. Subordinate conjunctions, on the other hand, only join the clauses. In fact, they do not join the clauses, so to speak. Rather, they subordinate the clauses, completely subordinating a clause to an independent clause to express complete thought. If that explanation was confusing, you might want to start by reading this: sentence structure. This page contains a collection of worksheets and tasks created on conjunctions. These materials cover the coordination and subordination conjunctions separately. At the end of the unit there is a test that covers both. I hope this helps you achieve your goals. Coordination of conjunctions Fact sheet | At the Hospital - This 4-page link coordination worksheet features 30 multiple-choice questions. There are fewer of them than subordinators, and there's an acronym to help you remember them. This PowerPoint presentation explains what coordination conjunctions do and provides many examples in action. I included a version with voice actor reading the examples and one without sounds. I also incorporated my lesson presentation into a video after the links. Coordination of conjunctions Lesson | PPTX - With sound coordination conjunctions lesson - Subordinate conjunctions are the building blocks of complex sentences. This PowerPoint lesson defines subordinate conjunctions and explains how they work. It includes many examples of subordinate conjunctions and even some practice issues to test your understanding. One of these files has people reading the examples, the other not. Use the one without sounds if your students are easily distracted. Or just play my amazing video on the subordinate conjunctions posted below.
